THE GREAT ENGLISHMAN.

Does the Looks, Decress, Speaks, Works, and Laves—A Remandable Man.

R is, porksps, impossible for the people of one astion to understand the genius and merits of even an illustrious leader who is the outgrowth of the civic institutions and the climatic coa_2titions of another aution. The ignorance of Englandmen concerning American affairs, politics, and public men is simply stupendous, and is hard to account for. Germany understands us botter, and France understands us not at all. It is, however, true that our conventional cellinate of European politics, diplomacy, and public men is often, if not commonly, wide of the mark.

Air. Gladstone is our of America's idols. He is surrounded by a halo to the average American mind. He fills out the ideal of a pure, capable, scholarly, achieving statement. To begin with, it is true that Mr. Gladstone is one of the remarkable men of this century. His is the most conspicuous politics and diplomacy. Bismarck is will berculean in will and force, and in imperious dietation; but he has ceased to be that ostensible almightiness that he obviously was a decade ago. Gladstone has lost no element of his power in Eugland. His control and influence always had their distinct limitations. He has never held the hearts of the whole people in allegiance to his leader-whip as Benconsfield, the Tory, dud, or as John Bright, the Radical, does. Beaconsfield was a supreme genius. Gladstone is a genius, but his genius has no supreme dominance over his theories and administration of affairs. In practical matters he has very usually been on the wrong on the question of the Crimean war; he was wrong on the question of our civil war. He went into office and power in 1880 upon the cry of "no tingolsm." and his administration bas been conducted upon the worst forms of that "blood-and-glory" principle.

Mr. Gladstone has an intense mind, but it is singularly usualar and, indeed, paro-

Mr. Gladstone has an intense mind, but it is singularly insular and, indeed, parochial. Theoretically he believes in human progress and in the capacity of Englishmen for self-government. But in practical polities his course has been far from direct and consistent; indeed, it has been eccentrically in many ways and theories.

consistent; indeed, it has been eccentric and zig-zag. In many ways and theories he is conservative, in others he is very progressive and radical. Neither moderates nor extremists are ever sure of his support. Recently his conduct of adiars in Parliament has illustrated the untrustworthiness of his judgment and zuidance. The country was enthusiastically with him on the franchise bill. The Radicals had no intention to concede to the Tories an avowal of their scheme of redistribution of seats in Parliament. Gladstone had been supposed to be staunch, unyielding, inflexible. The Tories stole a march upon him. All of a sudden—indeed in a gifty—he conceded pretty much all the Opposition had contended for, and so he leaves his party, especially the radical section of it, gazing and gaping in bewilderment. He began as a Tory. He has been radical and modes. and gaping in bewilderment. He began as a Tory. He has been radical and mode-rate in turn, and his somersualts have been whimsted and sometimes petulent.

However, this man has enorm However, test man mas continues grip mean English domestic affairs and upon the horar politicians and voters, and here are some of the reasons of this tight and strong hold upon the people. He is a magnetic orator. He is gifted with a glowing vocratic. He is gifted with a glowing vo-cabulary. He has an ease way to the peo-ple's imagination and heart. His eloquence is classic. He ranges over all fields of learning and into all realms of il-iustration. He is scholarly. He reads, he writes, he speaks with a predigality of will and vim perfectly actuarding. Then has the surreme visastounding. Then he has the supreme vir-tue of public life. His integrity is above the of public life. His integrity is above suspicion. He is transparently honest. His political opponents know this. His mind may be erratic, but his conscience is concentric. His conscience has never had a by-play. His conscience has known none of the charms and delights of coquetry and stolen kisses. And it has known none of their pains and penaltics.

Mr. Gledstone is an imposing figure

Mr. Gladstone is an imposing figure physically. He stands six feet in as boots, and, although he will be seventy-five years of age the 20th of the current December, he is straight and alert. He is broad-shouldered, well-made, and has all the signs about him of a well-preserved constitution. He is a man who would attract notice anywhere. He is distinguished and unusual in appearace and bearing. Mr. Gladstone has an unicommonly large head and high-broad forchead. His eyes are mysterious. They are set for back in his head, and yet they are great orbs, rolling restlessly and with intense piercing ontgo at times. I saw him in the flouse of Commons one night, listening to Lord Randolph Church-Mr. Gindstone is an im; night, listening to Lord Randolph Churchill on the vote of censure when he was pling up accusations and damaging facts against Gladstone for his conduct of affairs in Expit. He was on a high horse and was pouring hot shot into the Prime Minister, and Gladstone's eyes had the fire of hell in them. His eyes were in a frenzy of indignation and anger. I never say such eyes as are in this man's head. At times they are the eyes of a devil. I have often wondered why Mr. Gladstone is so difficult a man to converse with. He is always predecupied, and yet he is affable. He is seldom with you when he is talking to you. His mind is off elsewhere. I have noticed him in conversation with important and perhaps illustrious people, and still his mind seemed absent. But his eyes are a terror. They are so unearthly that they give one some. ill on the vote of censure when he are so unearthly that they give one some-times the inarression of being preternatural.

Mr. Gladstone's face is large, bony, swarthy, and full of crows' feet. But head, and face, and features, are all massive and majestic.

He dresses like a gentleman. In the commons he is frequently in full evening dress, and when he is intending to speak he is very nattily gotten-up, and always wears on such occasions a button-hole bou-cuet. On the streets and before the dinner wears on such occasions a button-hole bou-quet. On the streets and before the dinner hour in the Commons he wears—as do most elderly Euglish gentlemen—a double-breasted, high-cut frock coat and lightish trousers. Of course he always wears a stove-pipe silk hat, and is one of the first in the spring to don a white hat and white waistcoat. There are two wel-known gentlemen in England who are very noted for the monstrous sails or white wastcoat. There are well wastcoat, there are very noted for the monstrous sails or acres of white linea they wear about their necks—viz., Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Henry Irving. I saw Mr. Gladstone in the Commons one night, at the opening of the session, when he was outlining the policy and programmae of the ministry. He was in full evening dress and had a huge button-hole of illies, which stock up under his car and was no end of annoyance to him. It is soil—in a whisper—that Gladstone bates this big bunch of flowers in his button-hole when he is speaking, but that his adoring and considerate wife insists upon u. Added to the mischief-making nosegay was—what seemed to me—the further bother of an immense collar. This collar stands high up and is rigidly stiff, touching the lower points of his cars.

Mr. Gladstone speaks like most men of genius. In conversation he is moody. At

Mr. Gladatone speaks like most men of genius. In conversation he is moody. At one time he is brilliant and rapid in his speech, at another he is contriouplace and hesitating. Now he glowingly discourses, and again his fire is all out, and there is nothing but duit ashes remaining.

In public discourse he is equally uncertain of himself, and his audiences never know quite what to expect. He has a gigantic, overmastering will, and this is brought to his aid on all great occasions—when he is always great. He whips up his forces, pulls together his larging energies, and makes a powerful, ratifing speech whenever there is critical or supreme necessity. When Chancellor of the Exchewhenever there is critical or supreme ne-cessity. When Chancellor of the Exche-quer, if he was under the national pressure to put a little more tax upon the rate-fay-ers, he could make a budget speech of compact figures glow and glisten like fire or jewels. Parlament would vote any measure of taxtion after listening to Glad-stone state figures and schedules as though he were showering tamonds all over the stone state figures and schedules as though he were showering damonds all over the house.

His agreed is both thoroughly English and thoroughly un English. It is English in its caution and prudence. Nougan living so qualifies and hedges every stategoant he makes. He has infinite verblage. His sentences are long, but never involved. His use of words is precise, academic, and coreful. He has no raggedness of construction. He never loses the track of his monitonitive case, although the may be out of gunshot of his vero. His speech is clearly a sincere expression of bis mind and heart. This you feel when you listen to him. He may say untenable things, and he may arouse in von antagonism to his theories, but never to binself. Durang a campanga he will speak from one to two hours at a sizetch. His flustrations are drawn from classic literature, from andopoing is of history, and from contemparary life. He has little humor. I never heard him but once when he really succeeded in downright fun, and then he did not seen like himself, but was caughtout of binself. Hereo, from Whunington, N. C., for Port Spain, arrived at Nassau on the collections in the structure of his speeches, but keeps up an even interest and choquenes, which are only fairly exampled to the pression of the most extensive, for the structure of the present of the present of the present year they are anythered and the present of the work and the history, from the sixteenth century to the present of the present of the Work and 42.050 boys. guists affirm, a Gecidedly original speech. A distinguished German poet (Bodenstruck) speach this afternoon publishes the result of a canvase of the manufacturing portion of the city with reference to the employed labor. In the territory mentioned there are 542 firms and factories. In December, 1883, they employed a total of 30,500 men, 2,190 women, and 2,513 boys. Grand total, 35,203 persons. In December of the present year they are employing 25,323 men, 1,621 women, and 2,090 boys. This shows a decrease of 5,177 men, 569 women, and 423 beys, or a total decrease of 6,169 persons who are at present out of work. In the last two months of 1883 from 4,000 to 6,000 people were thrown out of work in 8t, Louis, 1,500 being relegated to idleness by the closing of one concern—the Vulcan Iron. The Post-Dispatch estimates that, taking into consideration this fact and the area of the city hat canvassed, nearly 15,000 persons are out of employment, nearly all of whom are skilled persons. The census of 1880 credits 8t. Louis with 17,000 day, laborers, and over half of these, it is said, are also idle.

The Queen does not care for a Prime Minister who is quite so self-respecting as Mr. Gledstone has uniformly been. Beaconsfield was a courtier. He knew all the little pleasant tricks and phrases of flattery. Her Majesty likes more and more—as do most people as they grow old—the incense of praise.

Ghadstone goes his way. He respects his sovereign, but he does not swing the censer of adulation before the throne. He is the cement of the Liveral party of England to-day. This ordinance was put promptly into force, and the Christian Government of Holy Russia laid an interdect on all books of religion and devotion, including Bioles and the gospels, printed in the vuigar tongue of these fourteen milition people, none being in circulation save those printed in Vienna. The censorship acted up fully to the spirit of the decree, and even forbade the publication of an "Anthology of Ukraman Poetry," which comes under the category of belies-lettres, if anything does, it was for his love of Ruthensan literature and his suspected Federalist tendencies that Professor Dragamanov was banished from his native land, and for the self-same reasons the students of Kief University invited him the other day to their festival. He is the representative of an opporessed nationality, and whenever the iron hand of Muscovite despotism relaxes its hold and the inevitable revolution, which is looming in the future, comes, the oppressed nationalists are destined to play a leading part; and more unlikely things have happened than the conversion of the empire of the Romanoffs into a federation of free States.

SURFACE INDICATIONS.

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath are the PIMPLES, STIES, SORE EYES, BOILS, and CUTANEOUS ERUPTIONS with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months now makes its presence feit through nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Serviolia. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of HEREDITARY SCRO-YULA.

The medical profession endorse ATEN'S SARSA-TABLLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Frances elewett, ex-state senator of Massachusetts and ex-mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real lasting good."
